Stock Market crash of 1929, bank closures, and less of these factors were caused by The Great Depression, the result of the stock market crash.

Some problems that Americans faced because of the Great Depression were things like hunger, government problems, protests, and less job opportunities.

In Document 7, the text states that "farmers refused to bring food to market until the cost of production was resolved." They took this action because of their economic situation. This was one way Americans dealt with the problems of the Depression.

Another problem faced by Americans was going hungry or cold. The way that President Hoover and most of the government dealt with this according to Document 1, is that they "hoped people with money could donate to those without money." Americans felt that this wasn't a good solution to the issue, and hated the President for taking the problem so lightly. They felt like they were left to deal with
